“Donovan and Hester present compelling new research that explores love and violence in both same-sex and heterosexual relationships. We see the impact of societal and cultural beliefs on experiences of domestic violence across different genders and hellofromsandy.com: Catherine Donovan, Marianne Hester.

A pioneering methodology, using both quantitative and qualitative research, challenges the heteronormative model in domestic violence research, policy and practice. The findings show similarities and differences in experiences of DVA across sexuality and gender, although DVA in both same sex and heterosexual relationships can be characterised as the exertion of power and control. Domestic Violence: What's Love Got to Do with It? By Maya Rhodan NNPA Washington Correspondent WASHINGTON (NNPA) – When Brittney Henderson was 16, she thought she was in love.
