The Unilever Series: Miroslaw Balka excerpt The latest commission in The Unilever Series How It Is by Polish artist Miroslaw Balka is a giant grey steel structure with a vast dark chamber, which in construction reflects the surrounding architecture – almost as if the interior space of the Turbine Hall has been turned inside out.

Miroslaw Balka's 'How It Is' for the Unilever Series, Turbine Hall, Tate Modern. Photograph: David Levene A gaping void, dark matter, Plato's cave, the blackest depth of night. The current Unilever artist, Miroslaw Balka, has also created an environment, but instead of creating something visual, or even visible, he has made a work using light-absorbing material across the walls of a storage container, for the purpose of experiencing darkness. Available for sale from White Cube, Miroslaw Balka, 'How It Is', The Unilever Series, Tate Modern, London (13 October -5 April).

The How It Is site complements Miroslaw Balka's Unilever Series commission for Tate Modern's Turbine Hall. Created in close collaboration with the artist and based on his own handwritten list of contextual references it incorporates audio, video and images into an immersive online environment.
